

a. 30.06 rifle. The 30.06 rifle is perhaps the most versatile gun available. It can be used against everything from the size of a dog to a grizzly bear. I decided to purchase two types, a semi-automatic carbine, light and easy to carry, for protection in the woods and in brush, and also against a possible enemy when hard-hitting, rapid fire was required; and a longer bolt-action type excellent for extended ranges. To facilitate this use, we purchased 12 Weaver mounting scopes which gives us accuracy up to and beyond 300 yards. We have purchased 15 semi-automatics at $2,081.25 and 25 bolt-actions at $3,030.20. The scopes cost $519.72 complete with all attachments, $571.69 with the 10% charge which Dick adds to wholesale prices in his deals with us in this area. I envision the 30.06's to be the arm most men on the staff will carry. It was the standard M-II fighting weapon.

b. 12-gauge shotgun. The shotgun is extremely valuable for game gathering and close range protection. 13 of these were repurchased for $1,005.29. These are pump-action and capable of doing an incredible amount of damage. Men are typically more afraid of shotguns more than any other type of weapon.

c. .357 magnum pistol. This is the pistol designed to shoot through car engine blocks. It is a favorite of highway patrolmen and law enforcement officials everywhere. I chose it for the men's standard holster weapon because it can be used in a pinch even to kill an attacking bear. Other pistols, with the exception of the .44 magnum (which are extremely difficult to obtain), simply do not have the stopping power we require in the woods. We have a total of 37 of these, costing $3,261.93.

d. 22 magnum pistol. These pistols, of which we have 6 costing $664, were purchased with two purposes in mind—to serve as the gun for the ladies guarding the children (it has little recoil yet is as powerful as a .38) and to be used for the practice in shooting handgun (the ammunition is about 6 times less expensive than that for the .357). They were not bought from Dick but were purchased retail because of their rarity. I include them in this report because of the quantity of ammunition purchased for them.

e. 22 automatic pistols. For the ladies, the 22 pistol is the best handgun, next to the 22 magnum which is almost impossible to find. The automatic, while dangerous to the untrained, is terribly lethal in the hands of those knowledgeable in its use. I plan to make our ladies experts. We have 20 of them, costing $1,467.12.

f. AR-7. The AR-7 and the next gun are the two most sought after guns on the US market today. The AR-7 is the survival gun issued to pilots of the United States Air Force. It is a 22 caliber semi-automatic rifle, which breaks down and fits into its own stock and weighs so little that it actually floats on water. We have bought 22 of these; $1,008.03 is the cost. Note: the 22 long rifle hollow point, which this rifle is capable of shooting, is the standard bullet used by the radical right-wing group, the Minutemen. They plan to fight in the streets of America with it.
